as a guarantee of the soundness and durability of this caution is rendered especially necessary as large quantities of inferior and cheap goods are prepared, season after season, and sealed with the name of RICHARDSON, by Irish Rogues, who regardless of the injury thus inflicted on the Amer-

LETTERS TO MISS ELIZA THOMAS.

In my girlhood's home in a Northern clime,
The land of the frost and the snow,
I had dreamed of a Southern clime,
Where my wandering foot should go;
A land of knights and ladies fair,
Where the richest perfume filled the air.

And one silent form for ever stood
Before my vision's eye.

Where a heavy thought might have belonged
To the home of a Southern clime,
A soul where love and song unite
To clothe the spirit in robes of white.

I left my home in that Northern land,
For a bright and tropical clime,
Where I found a home in the South,
My life in deathless rhyme.

Yet the strange wild dream of my early youth
Was false and pure as eternal truth.

I sought in the crowded halls of mirth,
To catch a glimpse of that form divine,
Yet coldly and sadly I turned away,
For that I hoped to see was mine.

I gazed on many a beautiful face,
But the pure, sweet vision I could not trace—
Until I sat in the house of prayer,
One beautiful Sabbath day.

Where men and women of every clime
Had gathered, there I saw her face,
When a voice, far sweeter than I can tell,
Entranced my soul with a witching spell.

'Twas a simple strain, that the maiden sang,
But oh! how thrilling sweet
Was the melody soft that fell from her lips,
My heart's own song to greet.

Tuning my soul's strings to her voice,
And giving my heart's voice,
I knew by the thrill of my poet heart,
That the beauty I long had sought
Was found in that lovely maid, clothed
In robes that my brain had wrought.

Oh, then, sweet girl, take this simple lay,
On them, sweet girl, take this simple lay,
Oh! breathe but a gentle sigh to me,
For one, though obscure, like I.

THE GAINES CASE.

The celebrated Gaines case has been decided by the United States Supreme Court in favor of Mrs. G. The case was argued last July, after a struggle of many days, and the decision, in possession of property variously estimated at from $100,000 to $200,000, was a triumph for the plaintiff.

The history, in brief, of this remarkable case is as follows:

Zulime Carriere, a French girl, had been entrapped into a marriage with a man named George De Grange, who represented himself to be a French nobleman, and became acquainted with Daniel Clark, one of the early settlers of Louisiana, and a man of considerable wealth and energy. This meeting was in 1802.

Clark soon after married the handsome French woman, and she lived with him in secret. In 1805, Mrs. Gaines was born. Soon after the birth of her child, Zulime Carriere, who had been married to Clark made public, and she left for New Orleans to obtain legal proof of her first husband's death.

An influential politician, took advantage of her absence to pay his addresses to Miss Clark, grand-daughter of Daniel Clark. An engagement was contracted, but Mrs. Gaines returned, and Clark was already married, and the engagement was broken.

Mrs. Gaines then became the Marchioness of Wellesley.

On her return to Philadelphia, Zulime discovered this new blow to her happiness. She at once set about proving her marriage to Clark, but found that she was unable to do so, and she then set about proving her marriage to Daniel Clark, but found that she was unable to do so.

In his perplexity, she sought the aid of her friends, and they set about proving her marriage to Daniel Clark, but found that she was unable to do so.

She then set about proving her marriage to George De Grange, but found that she was unable to do so.
